Legislative Focus: Syrian Refugees, Budget Outlook
The Senate returns today to vote on the nomination of Wilhelmina Marie Wright as judge for U.S. District Court in Minnesota. On Wednesday, the chamber is scheduled to take a cloture vote on a motion to proceed to H.R. 4038, a bill the House passed last year regarding Syrian refugees. The bill would require the heads of the FBI and Department of Homeland Security, as well as the national intelligence director, to unanimously certify a Syrian or Iraqi refugee seeking asylum would not pose a threat to security. The House passed the bill, 289-137, on November 19.

This morning the Congressional Budget Office is scheduled to release a summary of its annual Budget and Economic Outlook. The new tax and spending baseline is expected to show a substantial increase in the deficit, perhaps $1 trillion or more, over the next decade. The final report will be released Jan. 25.

On Wednesday, several Senate committees hold hearings of interest to states: Attorney General Loretta Lynch will testify before Senate appropriators on the President's recent executive actions on guns; the Agriculture Committee holds a markup on draft legislation reauthorizing federal child nutrition programs; and the Environmental and Public Works Committee will mark up a bill concerning hunting and fishing access on federal land.

Senate Floor: Convenes at 2 p.m. and is expected to hold a vote at 5:30 p.m. on a judicial nomination.

House Floor: In recess until next week, when it reconvenes Monday, Jan. 25.

Senate Introduces Bipartisan Child Nutrition Bill

Yesterday the U.S. Senate Agriculture Committee released the Improving Child Nutrition Integrity and Access Act (ICNIAA), a bipartisan bill to reauthorize federal child and school nutrition programs. The last child nutrition authorization, The Healthy, Hunger-Free Kids Act of 2010, expired last Sept. 2015. States and districts encountered increased costs, logistical issues and administrative burdens during implementation of the 2010 law. ICNIAA changes the primary grantee for the $22.1 billion school lunch program from "state educational agencies" to "authorized state agencies," allowing governors more flexibility to coordinate state and federal child nutrition efforts. It also shifts the period that states must inspect schools to ensure they are in compliance with federal child nutrition rules—from every 3 years to every 5 years. That change would end a shortened timeframe enacted by the 2010 law that carried considerable costs for states. The Senate Agriculture Committee will mark up ICNIAA Wednesday at 10 a.m. ET.

Education Department, HHS Release Healthy Students Toolkit

On Friday, the departments of Education and Health and Human Services (HHS) sent a letter to governors and state health and education officials outlining the critical role health care coverage and services play in ensuring that all students are ready and able to learn. The departments also highlight the release of a new toolkit, which details five high-impact opportunities for states and local school districts to support stronger communities through collaboration among health and education systems. The toolkit offers resources and guidance for states to increase access to health services and insurance through school-based health centers and to promote healthy environments through nutrition and physical health supports. In addition, it recommends better health care access for at-risk children. For more information on the letter and to access the full toolkit, click here.
