Kings of Jerusalem

In 877, Louis the Stammerer, son, & successor of *Charles, the Bald of France, upon accession to that crown bestowed many large largesses on his friends. In order to reconcile the malcontents who had not shared them, Louis found it expedient to dismember great portions of his domains; & hence arose many seignories, duchies & counties, possessed by various individuals & families. This is believed to be the origin of the counts of Anjou.

Fulco IV, Count of Anjou, 1060, imprisoned his brother Geoffrey III & was excommunicated by the pope. His consort Bertrade of Moulfort was carried off by King Philip I of France who married her.

Geoffrey IV, their son, released his uncle who died soon after, leaving Anjou to his nephew.

Fulco V, his son became King of Jerusalem & died 1142.

Geoffrey V, Plantagenet, his 3rd son obtained Anjou from his father in 1129. He married Mathilde d'Angleterre (Maud, dau. of Henry I); conquered Normandy which he gave in 1149 to his son Henry, afterwards Henry II, King of England. From this marriage of Geoffrey of Anjou & Maud, spring the line of the Plantagenets of England, a race of fourteen kings commencing with Henry II

Northmen

Northmen, Norsemen, Scandinavians are different names applied in a general way to the early inhabitants of Denmark, Norway & Sweden. These people formed the Northern branch of that Teutonic family. We cannot be certain when they took possession of the Northern peninsula but it is probable that they entered those countries long before Caesar invaded Gaul.

For the first eight centuries of our era the Norsemen are hidden from our view in their remote northern home: but with the opening of the ninth century, their black piratical crafts are to be seen creeping along all the coasts of Germany, Gaul & the British Isles & even venturing far up into then inlets & creeks. Every summer these dreaded sea rovers made swift descents upon the exposed shores of these countries plundering, burning & murdering: then upon the approach of the stormy season they returned to winter in the sheltered fiords of the Scandinavian peninsula. After a time the bold corsairs began to winter in the lands they had harried during the summer: & soon all the shores of the countries visited were dotted with their stations or settlements. These marauding expeditions & colonizing enterprises of the Northmen did not cease until the 11th century was far advanced. The consequences of this wonderful outpouring of the Scandinavian peoples were so important & lasting that the movement has been well compared to the great migration of their German kinsmen in the fifth & sixth centuries.*

The most noteworthy characteristics of these Northmen was the readiness with which they laid aside their own manners, habits, ideas & institutions & adopted those of the country in which they established themselves. In Russia, they became Russians, in France, Frenchmen, in England, Englishmen.

The Northmen began to make piratical descents upon the coasts of Gaul before the end of the reign of Charlemagne. The records of the raids of the Northmen in Gaul & of their final settlement in the north of the country is a

Saxon Kings in Germany

When the Teutonic tribe of the Aryan race pushed its way into Central Europe,* it crowded the Celts out into Western Europe, that is, into Gaul, Spain & the British Isles.

The land was anciently divided into several independent states & the inhabitants understood the attempts of the Romans to subdue them. The Romans did conquer some parts of the country but they were expelled before the close of the third century.

In the 5th century, the might of the Huns & other nations prevailed over the greater part of Germany. It was however totally reduced under Charlemagne who made himself master of the whole of it. He also founded the German Roman Empire (See page 74) & was crowned in St. Peter's taking the title of Emperor & entailing the dignity to his family.

After the death of Charlemagne, his descendants under the name of Carlovingian Dynasty, held rule till 911 when that dynasty fell, the chief power having passed into the hands of certain great dukes, five of whom got together & chose Duke Conrad of Franconia to be king, Germany thus becoming an elective kingdom.

On the death of Conrad I, the Saxons & Franconians united in placing Henry, a Saxon (or Henry "The Fowler", as he is called) on the throne in 919 A.D.

To explain who Henry "The Fowler" was, it is necessary to say that until Charlemagne directed his arms against the right bank of the Rhine, little is known of the *Saxons, a tribe dwelling on the North Sea. Charlemagne experienced much resistance from them led by Wittekind (or Wittikind) the Great last king of the Saxons who married Geva, daughter of Garmo I, King of Denmark. He died 765. In the end however the Saxons submitted to Charlemagne & one of the results was their conversion to Christianity.

Otho, Duke of Saxony, 4th in lineal descent from Wittekind refused to become King of the Saxons because of his age in 911 when the Saxons & Franconians united to elect a king & the choice finally fell on Othos's son Henry I or Henry "The Fowler" as he was called.

Henry "The Fowler", became the first of five Saxon emperors who ruled Germany

* See page 13

Saxon Kings in Germany

for more than a century & raised it to the greatest power in Europe. Born in 876, he ruled from 919-936. His greatest work was the consolidation of the German monarchy & the enlargement & improvement of the old fortresses. He ended the inroads of the Hungarians whom he defeated in 933. He became an ancestor of a long line of French & English kings through his daughters, Hedwig & Gerberga as well as ancestor of a line of Saxon emperors in Germany through his son Otto The Great.

We trace our descent through all of these lines. Let us study first our line through Hedwig.

Henry "The Fowler", 5th lineal generation from Wittekind, Great last King of the Saxons & King of Germany.
Hedwig, his dau. mar. Hugh Maguns, Count of Paris.

We now come to Henry The Fowler's son, Otto (or Otho I), his successor, The Great Roman Emperor, surnamed "The Great". The earlier part of his reign as King of Germany, was spent in subduing his turbulent nobles. He put an end to the invasions of the Bohemians, the Wends & the Danes & in 951 *went to the support of Adelaide (the fair widow – queen of Lombardy) against Berengarious II. Otto defeated Berengarious II & married Adelaide, Otto being at that time a widower. In 955, he defeated the Maggars on Lechfelld & in 962, was crowned Emperor at Rome reviving the title of the Holy Roman Empire of the German nation "thus receiving the title & the office founded by Charlemagne." From this time every German Emperor of the West continued to receive a triple coronation as King of Italy & Emperor of the West. "The Empire" was a little more than a fiction but it was a fiction that had great influence on political affairs throughout the Middle Ages.

* See page 113

In the ninth lineal generation from Otto I was

*Frederick I surnamed "Barbarosa" (Red Beard). He was crowned Emperor at Rome by Hadrian IV in 1155. His reign was chiefly occupied by wars against the turbulent German nobility & by six expeditions into Italy for the purpose of restoring the imperial authority in the republican cities of Lombardy. In 1176, owing to the defection of the powerful feudatory of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, he was defeated by the Lombards & was compelled to accept the Peace of Constance in 1183 by which he renounced regalian rights in the cities. In 1189, he joined the Third Crusade & was drowned in Kalykadmos in Asia Minor.
