Conference Details

AAC&U's Diversity, Equity, and Student Success Conference: "Engaged Inclusivity: Perceptions, Realities, and Aspirations" will examine what it means to work toward a campus environment where inclusivity thrives through constant reflection, analysis, and accountability. Engaged inclusivity transforms the dialogue on inclusion from general acceptance and tolerance of difference to active institutional transformation, based on the belief that the richness of our culture is because of our diversity and a recognition of our common humanity. The conference will provide a forum for educators, students, and community stakeholders to raise critical questions about institutional and external practices, policies, and structures that hinder full inclusion and to identify strategies for improving the educational environment for all participants.

Conference Highlights

Opening Keynote Address

Charles H. F. David, Chief Strategy Officer and Director of Research, University of Southern California Race and Equity Center

Panel Discussion

Lorelle Espinosa, Assistant Vice President, Center for Policy and Research and Strategy, American Council on Education (ACE)

The panel discussion will highlight ACE's recent survey and work on inclusion and freedom of expression.

AAC&U strongly encourages proposals that

- balance conceptual and theoretical frameworks with concrete, pragmatic examples;
- highlight the how-to pieces of a practice, strategy, or model;
- facilitate reflection and engagement that helps translate vision into practice;
- feature mature evidence-based programs; and
- foster discovery and problem solving through idea sharing and community building.

Proposals should address how the work can be adapted in a wide range of institutional types, including community colleges and minority-serving institutions.

Please review the conference overview and call for proposals for detailed information and instructions. We look forward to reviewing your proposals and seeing you in Pittsburgh in March.
