Markers on Campus

A self-guided walking tour of markers that highlight key elements of the University of Michigan's campus and history

University of Michigan

In 1837, as chartered by the constitution of the then-new state of Michigan, the University was located in Ann Arbor. A predecessor, University of Michigania, was founded in Detroit in 1817.

Spurred by the vision of its first president in Ann Arbor, Henry Tappan, and sharing the bounty of a rapidly expanding state economy, the University quickly developed into one the major institutions of higher education in the United States. Its long and complex history can be found in libraries and archives. That history can also be read by walking the campus.

In 1995, the University Committee on History and Traditions began a program to designate certain sites on the campus of particular historical significance. To date, 20 sites have been given historical markers.

We invite you to use this map and take this walk to connect with significant events and structures on campus.

Please note that the "site numbers" on the plaques do not correspond to the numbers on your map. Site designations have evolved over time. The map numbers facilitate the direction of the walk.

Enjoy this campus walk. We hope this will increase your interest in the history of the University of Michigan.
