Professor Carl Cohen

Carl Cohen, Ph.D., completed his undergraduate studies at the University of Miami and received his Ph.D. from UCLA in 1955. He is currently a member of the philosophy faculty at the University of Michigan and was one of the founding members of the University of Michigan's Residential College. Former chairman of the ACLU of Michigan, Professor Cohen has served on the University of Michigan's admissions committees and as chairman of its faculty. He has received the University of Michigan's distinguished faculty award, and in 1983 was awarded an honorary Doctorate of Human Letters by Ripon College, Wisconsin. He has also taught at universities in Jerusalem, Hong Kong, Singapore, New Zealand and Peru. Writing extensively on moral and political philosophy and logic, his essays have appeared in The Nation, Commentary, Ethics, and many law reviews and other periodicals. In addition, he has published and co-authored several books including, Civil Disobedience (1971), Introduction to Logic (11th edition 2001), Naked Racial Preference: The Case Against Affirmative Action (1995), and The Animal Rights Debate (with Tom Regan, 2001). His most current book is a point/counterpoint volume with James Sterba, Affirmative Action and Racial Preference: A Debate (2003).

Professor Tom Weisskopf

Thomas E. Weisskopf, Ph.D., earned his degree in Economics from M.I.T in 1966 and is now a Professor of Economics at the University of Michigan. Professor Weisskopf taught previously at the Indian Statistical Institute and at Harvard University. At Michigan he has divided his teaching and scholarly activities between the Economics Department and the Residential College, where he is a member of the Social Science Program. He served as Director of the Residential College from 1996 to 2005. The broad scope of his research interests has included issues of third world development and underdevelopment (with particular attention to India); the macroeconomic problems of advanced capitalist economies (including studies of trends in productivity growth and profitability from a political-economic perspective); and problems of economic transition and institutional development in the formerly socialist economies of the East. Most recently he has been working on affirmative action in higher education in the comparative context of the United States and India. Professor Weisskopf has co-authored nine books and published more than 90 articles in a wide range of journals in the fields of economic development, macroeconomics, comparative systems, and public policy. His most recent books are Microeconomics in Context (Russian edition 2002, U.S. editions 2003 and 2005) and Affirmative Action in the United States and India: A Comparative Perspective (2004).

Toward A Fair Michigan
&
Northwood University

Should a Free Society Allow Affirmative Action Preferences?

TOWARD A FAIR MICHIGAN

March 15, 2006
7:00 — 8:30 pm

Ashman Court Marriott Hotel
Midland, MI