Students interested in internships in legal, political, social, cultural and arts settings related to the Arab and/or Muslim American communities can sign up for ARABAM 390 in the Spring and Summer terms or the 3-credit AMCULT 305 course for the Fall.

The Arab & Muslim American Studies (AMAS) program has partnered with the Asian Pacific Islander American Studies (APIA) to offer students opportunities to attain experiences important to their future careers while simultaneously serving communities through commitments to social justice.

Interns provide important services, learn and develop new skills, and build connections with important local, national, and international leaders - particularly in legal, social, and cultural arts fields.
